Mr Blaine's Foreign Policy.

No the most complete answer to the silly lies about Mr Blaine's policy towards other nations being calculated to involve us in all sorts of trouble abroad, and bring himself with nothing short of acts of war, and notice to all the nations of this continent to join the United States in a Peace Congress is given below

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, Nov. 29, 1881.

Sir: The attitude of the United States in respect to the question of general war on the American continent is well known through its persistent efforts for years past to avert the evils of warfare, and its constant failure to bring positive results to an end through pacific counsels or the advocacy of impartial arbitration.

This attitude has been consistently maintained, and always with such fairness as to preclude reason for imputing to our Government any motive except the humane and disinterested one of saving the kindred States of the American continent from the horrors of war. The position of the United States as the leading power of the New World might well give to its counsels great weight and influence in the councils of nations, but the moral force of its example would be greatly lessened should any time there be rendered even a color of the future compulsion, but only by adding the sole, from a common friend.

For some years past a growing disposition has been manifested by certain states of Central and South America to refer disputes involving grave questions of international relationship and boundaries to adjustment rather than to the sword. It has been several such occasions a source of profound satisfaction to the Government of the United States to see that this country has been instrumental in the measure looked to by all the nations, however friend and neighbor.

The earnest and unpartisan counsel of President on such occasions has never been backed, and his efforts have been rewarded by the prevention of sanguinary wars or by conventional between peoples who were good as brothers.

The existence of this growing tendency to the adjustment of international differences by Congress suggested that a Congress of the American States for the consideration of methods of preventing war between the States of America. He desires that the invitation of the congress shall be strictly confined to the one great object; that it shall not be sought to make a way of permanently averting the horrors of cruel and costly conflict between countries, often of one blood and speech, but the even worse calamity of internal commotion and civil war, that it shall regard the hardships and far-reaching consequences of such struggles, the legacies of exhausted finances, of oppressive debt, of onerous taxation of ruined cities, of paralyzed industries, of devastated fields, of fatherless children, of the slaughter of men, of the widow and the orphan, of embittered resentments that long survive those who provoked them, and heavily afflict the innocent generations that come after.

The President is especially desirous to have it understood that, in putting forth this invitation, the United States does not assume the position of counseling, or attempting through the voice of the congress, to control the determinate solution of existing questions which may now divide any of the countries of America. Such questions cannot properly come before the congress. Its invitation is higher. It is to provide for the interests of all in the future, not to settle the individual differences of the present. For this reason especially the President has indicated a day for the meeting of the congress so far in the future as to give good ground for hope that by the time named the present altercation on the South Pacific coast will be happily terminated, and that those engaged in it may take peaceable part in the discussion and solution of the general question affecting in an equal degree the well being of all.

It seems also desirable to disclaim in advance any purpose on the part of the United States to prejudge the issues to be presented to the congress. It is far from the intent of the government to appear before the congress as in any sense the protector of the neighbors or the predestined and necessary arbitrator of their disputes. The United States will enter into the deliberations of the congress on the same footing as the other powers represented, and with the loyal determination to approach any proposed solution, not merely in its own interest, or with a view to asserting its own power, but as a single member among many co-ordinate and equal States. So far as the influence of this government may be potential, it will be exerted in the direction of conciliating whatever conflicting interests of blood, or government, or historical tradition may necessarily come together in response to a call embracing such vast and diverse elements.

You will present these views to the minister of foreign relations of the Argentine Republic, enlarging, if need be, in such terms as will readily occur to you, upon the great mission which it is within the power of the proposed congress to accomplish in the interest of humanity, and upon the firm purpose of the United States to maintain a position of the most absolute and impartial friendship towards all. You will thereupon, in the name of the President of the United States, tender to His Excellency the President of the Argentine Republic, a formal invitation to send two commissioners to the congress, provided with such powers and instructions on behalf of their government as will enable them to consider the questions brought before that body within the limit of submission contemplated by this invitation. The United States, as well as the other powers, will, in like manner, be represented by two commissioners, so that equality and impartiality will be amply secured in the proceedings of the congress.

In delivering this invitation through the minister of foreign affairs, you will read this dispatch to him and leave with him a copy, intimating that an answer is desired by this government as promptly as the just consideration of so important a proposition will permit.

I am, etc.,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

The "Illiterate" John A. Logan.

Boston Traveller.

Colonel Lyman, member of Congress from the ninth district of Massachusetts, by the grace of the Democratic voters thereof, assisted by a small army of Republican bolters, is to be credited with the discovery of the strangest reason yet advanced why Republicans should refuse to vote for Blaine and Logan. General Logan, he says, is an "illiterate man, but literate." The honesty of this convenient but the illiteracy is unpardonable. Colonel Lyman's brief credential to Congress are the votes of seventeen rebel and Butler men, and everybody knows that General Butler's chief hold on his followers is the strong flavor of Harvard college which pervades all his public utterances. Elected annually by this "educational" constituency the "illiterate" has been found to represent the nomination of a man for Vice-President who has never translated a Virgil, and cannot read Homer in the original Greek. Logan is, he declares, "a brave, frank, and honest man," but these qualities, "brave, frank, honest—what illiterate."

It is not disputed that Logan has intelligence, and enjoys the advantages of education, such as it goes. He is one of the most American public characters, and his career is a striking illustration of the fact that the best blood in the country is to be found among the boys in blue" that fought for the Union. He was a good deal of a soldier and a little of a politician, but he was a typical American patriot. Poor Logan, it is to be feared that he is "illiterate." If he had only gone through Harvard, what a different person he might have been! With the advantages of a liberal education, what might he not have been? One of the broadest minds, possibly, that ever graced the State's attorney pleading in due period for the rendition of fugitive slaves, or justifying the murder of Lovejoy. If only his grandfather had attended the Hartford Convention, and his father had been a Massachusetts Federalist instead of a Western Whig, and he himself had been sent to Harvard, John A. Logan might have amounted to something. Possibly he might, under those benighted conditions, have lived to enter Congress by the grace of Butler ballots, talk free trade at home and vote against tariff reduction at Washington, and finally succeed grandly at some Western leader as an "honest man, but illiterate."

John A. Logan is, manifestly, a grand impersonation of lost possibilities. Nominated for Vice-President he is doomed to defeat as an "illiterate" fellow, whom Colonel Lyman cannot support. He is long on honesty, but short on classical lore. As a learned pundit the æsthetic soul of Colonel Lyman weighs him in the balance and finds him wanting. His speculest battery that lack of acquaintance with the unknowable, and that failure to grasp the unattainable, which the erudite representative of Butlerism and Bolterism feels to be the prime requisite of a Vice-President and possible President. "There is something, too, about John A. Logan's make-up that is out of harmony with the clear, upper air in which Colonel Lyman lives, and moves, and has his being."

The suspicion darkly gains upon us that John A. Logan may never have studied Emerson, or attended one of Matthew Arnold's lectures. Let him come East at once, and see what a course of Concord Philosophy can do for him. Then, if he will abandon the barbaric mode in which he now wields the brush and comb, wears his hair bangled and his opinions to match, mind his P's and Q's, lay in a stock of pure prosody and sterner syntax (reading Colonel Lyman's marvellous letters to the Old Norfolk Club), explaining why he suspects himself of Republican proclivities to reach his party, the Republican party may stand some show of electing him. As it is, he is plainly predestined to defeat. He has made "his mark" in the world, but he has been detected in the act of literacy; and the forty-hundred Bereft who vote for Theodore Lyman, Leopold Morse, and the other will have none of him. He is an "honest man, but illiterate," and he must go.

"The sagacious people who condemned Abraham Lincoln as "a rail-splitter" Henry Wilson as "a cobbler," and Ulysses S. Grant as "a tanner," have found him out also. He is "illiterate." The Harvard graduates who form a vast majority of the voters in this State, could condone almost everything else in John Logan. But he is an "illiterate," and that is an unpardonable sin. If, were better that he had never been born.

Butler and John Kelley recently held a secret conference in New York. Butler promises to be very uncomfortable shortly in the Democratic Convention.

The New York World voices the sentiments of many Democrats when it advises the party to deal gently with the tariff question before obtaining possession of the government." No doubt that party would like to sneak into the White House without declaring its policy on this great issue, but it has left a record that it can't conceal, and whatever it may promise or however it may attempt to smooth out of sight those matters upon which it is necessarily to take an honest stand, the people will look to its acts in the past and the verdict will be that a party that has had such a career is not fit to assume control of the affairs of this great Nation.

Mr. Geo William Curtis has a letter in the New York Tribune in which he makes a lamentable failure in his attempt to answer the very pertinent questions, which appeared in our columns yesterday, cruelly propounded by a gentleman who took a prominent part in the election of a delegate to the National Convention. The fact is Mr. Curtis has put himself, or allowed others to place him in a very compromising position and probably no one realizes the truth of this more thoroughly than does Mr. Curtis, and his proud explanations only leave him more hopelessly in the mire. It will be a very difficult matter for a man who has so very considerable trust the wisdom of from a national conference, the only object of which was to get at the sentiment of a few of the delegates as to the best man for a candidate for Vice President, because he should feel bound to abide by the decision of the majority, to explain why it is that the title of a representative body of men, a large majority of whom were in favor of our standard bearer, whose nomination was made in a perfectly open and fair manner.

What Byington Says.

"He who would accomplish a purpose must provide suitable means for doing it. No man can expect to see a quart instantly changed to a bushel. The mere looking at a dollar will not make a hundred out of it. No single thing in this world can be regularly sold at a price below its cost. People may experiment and try, but it will always turn out that it is best to pay a fair price for a good and safe article. But, if there is any place in the white world where this is necessary, it is where a man determines upon that most unselfish of all acts, the providing for an inheritance for his family.—W. W. Byington in Independent.

You can get exactly what you are willing to pay for by taking a policy in The Conn. Mutual Life, on the new plan.

Said ballot boxes shall be provided at the expense of the city at a price not exceeding fifty dollars each.

Section Two. All ballots cast at any such election hereafter held in the city shall be deposited in such boxes, and no ballot shall be counted in ascertaining the result of such election unless it is so deposited and cancelled, or is rejected in accordance with the provisions of this ordinance.

Section Three. If, for any reason, it shall become impossible at any election to make use of the ballot box provided by the City Clerk as herein provided, the presiding officers at such election shall make a record of the fact, and nature of the difficulty, stating the box number, and the balloting shall proceed as hereinafter provided.

Section Four. The City Clerk shall, at the expense of the city, provide places for the safe and sufficient keeping of the ballot boxes furnished as herein provided, and shall be responsible for the care and oversight thereof, shall see that they are kept in safe and proper condition necessary to make the legal returns by the warden and ward clerk of the result of such election.

Section Six. The presiding officer, while the polls are open, shall work the ballot box, by turning the crank once, and no more, immediately after each legal voter has deposited his ballot, and before the next voter has been received in the box.

The ballot box shall not be removed from the public view after it is shown to be empty, and when sealed, until all ballots have been removed therefrom and counted.

No ballot shall be removed from the ballot box, nor the box unlocked, while the polls are open, unless it shall be absolutely necessary to prevent the ballot box from being broken or to repair some defect in the working of the box, and then to be opened only in presence of at least two legal voters, one of whom shall be of the political party voting at such election.

Section Seven. The presiding officer shall cause all ballots found in the ballot box at the closing of the polls, after the same have been sorted, counted and declared to be secured in an envelope to be put upon the outside of which a seal provided for the purpose, and the presiding officer shall endorse thereon the number of the ward, the date of the election and his certificate, that all the ballots found in the ballot box at the first opening of the ballot box after the closing of the polls, and none others, are contained in said envelope, and return said envelope, together with the ballot box and key, to the same place and at the same time he is now required to make his return of the result of the election in his ward, which ballots shall, thereafterwards, be under the control of the municipal officers and kept by them for one year.

Section Eight. Whoever willfully and maliciously destroys or injures a ballot box or the mechanism thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding fifty dollars or imprisonment not exceeding six months.

Section Nine. Any officer of whom duties are required in this ordinance, who willfully or fraudulently neglects or refuses to comply with the provisions of this ordinance, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars or imprisonment not exceeding six months.

News About the Capital

Acts Approved by the President.

WASHINGTON, June 27. The President has approved the act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and to encourage the American foreign carrying trade. He has also approved the act equalizing the rank of graduates of the Naval Academy upon their graduation next to various corps, the act providing for the administration of oaths to witnesses in matters pending in either House of Congress, and a joint resolution authorizing the printing of annual reports of the Bureau of Ethnology.

National Encampment.

Senator Mitchell introduced in the Senate to-day a bill to incorporate a National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. The objects of the association, as stated in the bill, are first to preserve and strengthen the kindred fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion and perpetuate the memory and the history of the dead. Second, to assist such former comrades in distress as need help and protection and extend needful aid to widows and orphans of those who have fallen. Third, to inculcate true allegiance to the United States, based upon a paramount respect for and due fidelity to the Nation's Constitution and laws, to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, to incite insurrection, treason or rebellion, or to any manner impugn the inviolability and permanency of our free institutions, and encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights and justice to all men.

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.—First Session

Senate

WASHINGTON, June 27. The Senate was called to order to-day by Senator Garland of Arkansas. The chair laid before the Senate letters from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting information in regard to the Suez Canal.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr Pendleton, calling on the Secretary of War to collect and report to the Senate the views of the chief of the Harbor Bureau, after some discussion, laid over.

The bill to be called up at noon to-day, after the consideration of the Soldiers' Civil bill, that bill excepted, to appropriation bills and to accomplish its passage.

On motion of Mr Pendleton the bill to ... that the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company ... was agreed to.

The Senate then took up the bill providing for the forfeiture of unearned lands granted to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr Hawley said he had expected to submit a few words respecting the great holdings of land that have been permitted to grow up in the West in the hands of the individuals or corporations, but he would forebear. He would, however, in order to call to the subject, and he invited the attention of the Senate to a very concise statement, a catalogue of the citizens of foreign States holding enormous estates in the Territories and various States. Among them he found the name of Senator John V Leyden as holding 80 000 acres.

[Senator Leyden is mistake, continued Mr Hawley, when I say that the object of that act appears to be the prejudice of a gentleman whose circumstances are such that it will hardly speak for himself, though he has kindly qualified as every body knows to defend. I beg leave, the Chair, to say that the gentleman referred to is not the owner of any such quantity of land as the report states or anywhere else. It is only the object of the bill on which I speak, and which he purchased from the original holders, and to which he has ceded little by little down to the State of Illinois. He has not the good of 10 sections to be the owner of the 80,000 acres referred to.

Alluding to the same matter, Mr Hoar said the statement is utterly false, and I do not think it is material. I do not propose to give a schedule of my property, and only say that the property I do own is in the State of Illinois. I do own some two or three tracts of land, but all put together would not make a section; both part of which I charge.

On motion of Mr Hoar the Senate discharged the Election Committee from further consideration of the House bill to the relief of the heirs of Broken Leg, and ordered a communication of conference on it. The Senate then went into executive session and adjourned.

House

The Conference report on the bill granting the right of way through Fort Leavenworth to the Leavenworth & Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company was agreed to. That Conference report on the Pensions Appropriation bill was agreed to.

Mr Turner of Georgia, called up the election case of Thomas G Skinner from the second district of North Carolina. The question arose in this case as to what Skinner was elected from a proper district and there is no contest pending.

Mr McMillan of Tennessee, raised a question of consideration in favor of the petition which he said the House declined to consider the election case.

The conference report on the army appropriation bill was submitted, agreeing upon all the items except upon the Senate amendment striking out that portion of the bill which regulates the compensation to be paid subsidized railways for army transportation. The other sections of the bill as agreed upon appropriates $24,154,150, being $210 000 more than was carried by the bill as it originally passed the House. The report was agreed to. The disagreeing vote to the amendment indicated was instructed put and Messrs. Forney, Townshend and Keifer were appointed as conferees.

Mr. Henley, of California, made an unsuccessful attempt to secure consideration for the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill, when the House went into Committee of the Whole.

At one o'clock the committee rose for the purpose of permitting the House to dispose of the Backbone forfeiture bill. Mr White, of Kentucky, rising to a question which he said affected the dignity of the House, sent to the clerk's desk and had read a letter published in the National this morning over the signature of Representative E. J. Ellis, of Louisiana, in which the writer intimated he had the impression that improper methods had been used in obtaining this land grant. Mr White thought a full investigation of all the facts connected with this land grant, to find grab, from beginning to end, should be made.

Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, expressed regret that the gentlemen who were endeavoring to forfeit this earned land grant should have been driven by stress of weather to the poor expedient of directing a personal attack on him. While I do not, he continued, desire to interrupt a vote on the question by any matters personal to myself arising from the publication of a letter purporting to have been written by myself, and which letter I pronounce to be malicious and garbled to suit the purpose of the publisher thereof, I desire now to state that at an early day I shall claim from the House, as a matter of personal privilege, an opportunity to expose the animus, falsehood and malignity of the unwarranted, unprecedented and unparalleled assault directed against me in the public publication alluded to. All I desire now to say is that it is the last vindictive thrust of a professional blackmailer whose disappointed greed and avarice have directed this blow at me and those unfortunate connection with him originated in a desire to do him kindness. (Applause.)

The speaker announced the question to be on the motion to table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House yesterday defeated the "Backbone" forfeiture. The motion was agreed to; and the House proceeded to the consideration of private business. After the passage of several private bills, Mr. Valentine, of Nebraska, rising to a question of privilege, said: Some days ago, a gentleman from New Jersey (McAdoo) had obtained leave to print some remarks in the Record. The gentleman's speech appeared in the Record to-day, and he found he had taken occasion to print as part of his remarks a dispatch sent from this city to a New York newspaper January 6th. It contained the names of some of our native land monopolists. In the list of names as printed in the Record to-day appeared the name of Senator John A. Logan as owning 80,000 acres of land. Senator Logan had called his (Mr. Valentine's) attention to this to-day, and had desired him to say the statement was false.

The gentleman from New Jersey had taken occasion while he was loading the soldiers of the land to stab one of the brightest and most gallant of those soldiers. (Loud applause on the Republican side.)

Mr. Cannon offered a resolution that the Record of June 25th be so amended as to show that the speech purporting to have been delivered by Mr. McAdoo, in which reference was made to Senator Logan, was not actually delivered, but was printed in the Record of June 25th. This Record, he said, should not be allowed to become a record of those matters which they had not the courage to stand on and dare to avow.

Mr McAdoo desired to say he did not retract one word of the speech. He did not consider for one moment that he had violated any rule of courtesy, equity or manliness in its publication. The article had been published last January and had been copied from Maine to California, and there had not been a line of contradiction from the most sensitive Senator or his friends in regard to his name in that list. The gentleman from Illinois had said he had not courage to deliver the speech in the State from which he came and in the district he represent. His vilest enemy had never yet whispered he was lacking in courage or manhood. He had never said behind the back of a living man that which he would not say to his face. (Applause on the Democratic side.) The gentleman from Illinois, said he had brought the matter before the House because the Record had been violated. The gentleman better than that. It was simply because the gentleman's name was in the list.

Mr. Cannon was on his feet to reply to Mr McAdoo when the hour of five arrived and the Speaker, amid much merriment, declared the House in recess until 8 o'clock. The evening session was consumed in the consideration of bills granting a pension of $72 a month to the widows of Colonel Ingersoll and Chief Justice Dent, but no action was taken.

Business Items.

One would hardly believe it possible that in the present depression of the stock market any lot of stock on favorable terms, would be rapidly and fully taken up. The directors of the American Electric and Illuminating Company, however, have published that on the ordinary observation which is open to the great public to take up $100 000 of new preferred stock for the increase and extension of the Company's business, their expectations were more than realized. Numerous and liberal have been the responses to the call, that there is every prospect that the full amount of stock offered will be taken up by the 10th of July, at which date it has been decided to close all outstanding applications, and not to receive no more subscriptions at par. Intending investors should therefore govern themselves accordingly and lose no time in filling the orders and making their payments, to secure their stock at par.

"Where art thou, my beloved?
Canst thou not come at my will?
Shall not my heart as the shadow fall around me
As wending my steps in their toil?"

The last words died away in a low, wailing sigh, as the singer arose from the piano-stool, crossing the room, sank into the depths of a velvet fauteuil, and gave herself up to the thoughts of the print. Lovely picture she made, the white-robed figure clearly outlined against the crimson cushions, the waving, golden hair coiled low in the neck, while little clustering curls drooped over the pure white forehead. The eyes were closed now, and one could only guess at their dark, soulful depths.

Five years ago, Dr. John Hadley, who had retired from practice, came to a little town of E—, built and furnished in elegant style "White Rose cottage." His family consisted of wife and one child, Althea, "Allie" as she was often called, a bright, lovable girl of fifteen summers.

Among the many new acquaintances Althea formed, was a light-haired, blue-eyed girl of some two years her senior, named Edwin Loveland. Isbel with his mother, Mr. Winston, having lost his wealth in infancy. At his becoming of age he would inherit several thousand dollars, also Cleveland Hall, a beautiful country residence some twenty miles from E—. It was at times all devotion to Althea, visiting her with her studies, and taking her books to the woods together, then again he would scarcely notice her, sometimes talking to another for days at a time. But Isabel could she was very fond of him, and would allow no one to say a disparaging word of him in her presence. Time passed, and when he went away to Newton, Mass., to college, he left behind him regrets, sweet, passionate love, while he well it would have been difficult to tell. Letters and tokens were exchanged for several hours, and they were engaged.

Althea seemed to be the only one who regarded his departure as he was an favorite among the young people. For a time some strong, peculiar fascination she could not see what others [illegible] he was of an extremely selfish, disposition, caring little for other's wishes or opinion, but often took delight in saying and doing things to invoke comment. Many times had he [illegible] and insulted her, but when she spoke him for it, he has moved up his loving caresses always dispelled her chains, and in her great love for him she was too ready to find an excuse for his conduct. Poor child! She had yet to learn how little respect or dependence was to be placed in his assertions!

After he went to Newton, they kept up a steady correspondence for about a year and a half, then his letters suddenly ceased. What he was not sick she well knew, as she often heard of him through Winston.

At last an agony of doubt and grief he wrote, asking the reason of his strange silence. A sweet, pitiful little note it was, every word breathing of her love for him, in reply to cagerie looked for came all [illegible] agony, heartsick letter, giving no excuse for his silence, and alluding to "a thoughtless jest," as he termed it, in a mocking manner. She read it through without tears or moans, only the face, usually so fair, settled into a deep, ashen hue. She would not believe that again had smooth, well-falsehood had won the day.

After this Althea's health unproved rapidly, the roses coming back to her pale cheeks, at length finally uniting them together. Jewels, wakes, or quiet interviews in the house or about the grounds.

On the 4th of July the family went to Lake Avonite summer resort, accompanied by Mrs. Allen Henry, a friend dear to her father, and Mr. Haley's, and a frequent visitor at the cottage. He was a [illegible] about thirty-five years old, tall and well built, with black hair and eyes of the same hue. His mouth, which beneath the heavy, drooping mustache, was rarely seen, betokened both tenderness and strength of character. In short, he was the man such would instinctively respect and women admire.

But as yet, marriageable daughters and respecting matrimony had "neglected" his calm. None knew, or even guessed, that the entire love of his noble heart had long ago been given to Althea, though recently, for the difference in ages, and betrothal to Edwin, were either sufficient reason, he thought, why she could ever return his love, and why he should push his own secret. It was hard to know she had bestowed her affections upon [illegible] a man as he believed Edwin Clevesland to be, yet he daily prayed that her choice might be a happy one, even though himself could have no share in it. Another month's happiness caused for Allie, as it came a grand party and ball, given in honor of Gov. K——, who was stopping at their hotel.

II.

Very pretty Allie looked in her costume of amber-colored satin and lace, with a wreath of half-blown scarlet roses at the throat and waist, and as Edwin escorted her down to the parlors he felt a thrill of pride to know that the lovely girl on his arm was his own if he chose to claim her, and that she would eclipse all other beauties at the ball, even Miss May, the governor's pretty daughter. But she was utterly unconscious of the looks of admiration which followed her wherever she went; she cared only for his approval.

During of dancing after a while, she drew a bright, fleecy scarf over her shoulders, and was about to step out on one of the balconies, when a hand was laid lightly on her arm, and she looked up to see Mr. Clevendon.

"May I go too?" he queried.

Mentally, she responded, and added jokingly, "Do not feel flattered if I say [illegible] are the only one I'd care to talk to just now. I came out here for a few moments' rest and quiet, but you know you are always welcome;" and stepping out, they seated themselves in the shade of the climbers.

It was a lovely night, and a lovely spot. One entire side, and part of the front of the balcony was covered with some luxurious vine, through which the moonbeams flickered. Below, in all its moonlit beauty, lay the ocean, dotted here and there with little pleasure boats floating lazily along, while from indoors came the rich, mellow music, and the hum of many voices. Henry Clevendon and his companion chatted gaily for a while, then, as if by mutual consent, lapsed into silence.

Neither of them heeded the sound of voices proceeding from the window through which they had just passed; but as the words reached their ears, Althea [illegible] Edwin's voice, and Henry Clevendon [illegible] Edwin, who was standing directly in front of them, and [illegible] forth.

Oswald, Cleveland, are we not about to have the village congratulating you upon your marriage with Miss Hadley?"

A vivid flush rose to Althea's face, then receded, leaving her deathly pale as the reply came clearly and decidedly: "No, I do not expect."

Henry started to his feet, but there was no way of retreat for them, so he drew Althea further back into the shadows as the voices went on.

"She is so [illegible] that a man could desire for a wife, you know, well, that I admit, but she will never [illegible] interest of Cleveland Hall. I enjoy her society, and am proud to know her, consider the handsomest girl in the county," She loves me, yes, from the depths of her innocent heart; and then this amusing to see how one little word can [illegible] to make her [illegible] tremble, as the case may be. You know, for some months before leaving Newton, I wrote to him only once, and that one letter I fancy she will never forget, even though she forgave. Consequently, upon my returning to E——, I found my pretty bird on the very verge of distraction, and at first a little inclined to be unruly. But a half-hour's conversation with her proved that my influence had by no means gone.

Henry attempted to rise, and would have silenced the treacherous words, but Althea's hand was tightly laid on his shoulder, and the mute, pleading eyes behind him bade the willspeech.

"Oh, my precious one," he murmured, drawing her closer as she leaned against him for support, and pressing a tender, passionate kiss on the cool, white cheek, "God knows I wish it were in my power to shield and protect you from all this sorrow and heartache."

The words were regretted as soon as uttered, but she was kneeling intently for Edwin's next words, which came in a low, [illegible] tone:

"Forgive me, my darling, for the pain I have caused you, but I am not worthy of you, and [illegible] you are free to choose between us. Cleveland is a noble fellow, and I know he loves you with his whole heart. Be happy, my darling, and forget that you have ever known me."

Then [illegible] Althea's head fell forward on her hands, and she sobbed as if her heart would break. Edwin [illegible] and [illegible] her, but she waved him off, and he [illegible] the balcony.

Henry Clevendon [illegible] Althea, and [illegible] her head upon his breast, he whispered:

"Althea, my darling, you have chosen me, and I am proud and happy that you have done so. Edwin is not worthy of you, and I am glad that you have found it out so soon. Now, dearest, look up and smile, for I want to see my darling's face."

Slowly she raised her head, and looked up into his face, and then, with a glad cry, threw her arms around his neck, and hid her face on his breast.

"Oh, Henry, I love you, I love you, and I am so glad that you have come to me!" she said, softly.

Henry Clevendon [illegible] Althea's head, and [illegible] her lips, then [illegible] to himself: "Edwin, you will [illegible] that you have lost, so those goes." Very long the two [illegible] a light bounce, [illegible] side.

The cool sweet is replaced now by a warm, [illegible] and [illegible] both her hand to his lips, then [illegible] "Althea, my darling, I have come to you!" She started quickly at the sound, then sprang to her feet, faced him with blazing eyes, then smiling, she [illegible] "You! Little enthusiasts of temper in her were nothing new to him, and if [illegible] was a little more fierce than any she had been in months daunted, still, she [illegible] my welcome home! Have you not [illegible] word or loving kiss for me after [illegible] years of separation?" The dark eyes softened, and the sweet [illegible] but only for an instant.

"How dare you," she replied, "shame yourself upon me here, after treating [illegible] such a letter as you sent me? It is [illegible] consolation to you to know that it [illegible] me down to death's very door? The look of surprise, sorrow and [illegible] Cleveland's face was well [illegible], as he exclaimed: "Heaven forbid! I never dreamed it would affect you [illegible] thing more than a few hours' [illegible] would be speedily dispelled by the [illegible] sent in the following [illegible]:

"How the fond, caressing [illegible] trembled at such words, thrilled through [illegible] soul. Needless to tell of the [illegible] which followed, but while at last [illegible] her more serenely to [illegible] forgave all—ave that he was [illegible] her [illegible] who, whispering sweet words of [illegible] into her willing [illegible]. A smile of [illegible] curved the corners of his mouth [illegible] that again had smooth, well-[illegible] and won the day.
